

George Maroosis – Oct 11, 2010

It has been many years since we had a community wide strategic planning process. In the past Council invited community stakeholders from many different sectors to participate. Sessions were also open to the general public. After the process was complete and the input was recorded a new vision “strategic plan” was developed and further refined. It is time to do it again.

Such a process would assist the Mayor and Council to address vision, environment, communication, economic development and many other issues identified by our citizens.

When it comes to personal consultation I have always been available at my place of business where I have made people feel welcome to express their concerns. I believe that it is the Mayor and Councils job to make citizens feel welcome to express themselves at Council meetings or in other social situations.
